

The proposed rules change to permit further consolidation of media ownership seems nothing more than pandering to special interests. It is apparent in any rational analysis that we would benefit from more, not less, competition in our news and opinion media. To assert otherwise seems dishonest. Given the long-established principle of public ownership of the airwaves, "government regulation" is not an enemy in this case.